Mr. Cole had confided before his examination to an inquiring reporter that he was subjected to heavy loss in his professional earnings through his frequent attendance upon the committee This feeling was reflected in the manner of the witness when he was testifying again regarding the hospital check. His general explanation of that was that at that time he was connected officially with several public service corporations. Of one he was president, of another vice-president of another secretary, of another treasurer and checks and vouchers were daily presented to him whereon his name and some one of his official titles appeared Therefore, when among the day's grist of checks and vouchers there appeared; one of each of those papers with the word "attorney" following, he merely indorsed the check and signed the voucher with his name and the word 'attorney" thereafter without his curiosity concerning them being aroused.
